In a conversation about language with a Métis man from St. Laurent he said
“I speak broken French”

It is not broken
It is rare
A perfect dialect of a language almost forgotten formed through our ancestors’ resistance
To the colonizer
To the policies
To the pressures

Your language is a collector's item
It has been stolen
It has been studied
And now it is being shared Back with those in which it belongs to the children to the youth
to the Elders

The survival of our mother tongue
Is beautiful
A bud of life after a dark period the wind has brought our words back through the prairies it whispers each syllable
To our past
To our present
To our future

It is not broken
I fear you have undervalued your voice
this language holds strength
Stories that were meant
To be shared
To be heard
To be revived

It is not broken French
It is whole
It is geographically distinct
Every vowel, every sound
Is sensational
Is survival
Is French-Michif
